Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Captain Laxmi Sehgal is one of the lion hearted women India ever had. She picked up the Gun for the Indian National Army (INA) founded by Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose and led it like a tigress during the struggle for Indian freedom.

Laxmi Sehgal was born in 1914 to a traditional Tamil family. She got her first patriotic lessons from her mother who was a member of the Congress herself. She completed her degree in medicine from the Madras Medical College and went to Singapore for a career as a doctor. However, something very different was waiting for her there. Singapore at that time, was ruled by the British and they had to surrender when the Japanese invaded the country. Thousands of Indians were taken as prisoners. At this juncture, Netaji invited the Indian prisoners to join the INA and fight against the British. Laxmi was one of them and Netaji was impressed by her courage and asked her to lead the Rani Jhansi Regiment. She fought like a tigress against the British in the jungles of Burma.

Lakshmi Sehgal stands out largely due to her belief in using violence if necessary to get India her freedom. She fought the British at every opportunity she got and was placed under house arrest for two years, but still passively resisted the British.

Until her death in 2012 Captain Laxmi Sehgal had the same indomitable attitude after India became independent and, while practicing as a doctor in Kanpur, she continued working for the betterment of society.

Relief camps were organised by her during the Bangladesh crisis for refugees in Calcutta.

She played a key role in providing medical facilities to the victims of the Bhopal gas tragedy. She also worked to restore peace after the 1984 anti-Sikh riots. In a campaign against the Miss World competition in Bangalore, she was arrested.

She wrote an autobiography which details her inspiring life and features some never-seen-before pictures.

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

The entire cosmos exists in a state of mutual dependence and support.

Living in accordance with this principle of universal harmony is what is known as dharma. The sorrow of every living being in this world is our own sorrow, and the happiness of every living being is our own happiness. In harming others, we harm ourselves. Similarly, when we help others, we are helping ourselves.

A man sits with a candle in front of his house at night. A sudden wind blows out the candlelight. It is only then that his eyes are opened to the beauty of the smiling full moon and the cool moonlight. Similarly, when we give up our selfishness, the bliss we receive in return is great.

We should strive to reach a state in which we are able to view all beings of the world, both animate and inanimate, as a part of our own Self. Just as the right hand reaches out to aid the left hand when it is injured, the ability to feel the sufferings of all beings as our own, and an intense yearning to comfort them, should awaken within us.... The goal of all religions is one — purification of the human mind. To overcome our selfishness, to love and serve our fellow beings, to rise to the level of universal consciousness — these goals are common to all religions. The core of religion is to foster these human values and awaken the innate divinity in people.

Though the founders of all religions realised and practiced the noblest ideals in their lives, their followers have often not lived up to those ideals. Instead of focussing on the essence of the religious principles of love and compassion, they focus on the external rituals and traditions, which vary from religion to religion, which does more harm than good.

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

The entire cosmos exists in a state of mutual dependence and support.

Living in accordance with this principle of universal harmony is what is known as dharma. The sorrow of every living being in this world is our own sorrow, and the happiness of every living being is our own happiness. In harming others, we harm ourselves. Similarly, when we help others, we are helping ourselves.
