Directions : Read the following passage and each group of four statements given below contains one statement which is most acceptable in the light of the passage and answer the questions 21 to 23.

When I go into a stranger's library I round the bookshelves to learn what sort of a person the stranger is and when he comes in I feel that I know the key to his mind and the range of his interests. A house without books is a characterless house, no matter how rich the Persian rugs only tell you whether he has got money, but the books tell you, whether he has got a mind as well. It is not a question of money that we don't buy books. I repeat that the books are the cheapest as well as the best part of the equipment of a house. You can begin your library with the expenditure of a few dollars. Nearly all the best literature in the world is at your command at two dollars a volume. For 100 dollars you can get a library of fifty books. Even if you don't read them yourself, they are a priceless investment for your children. What delight is there like the revelation of books for the sudden impact of a master-spirit, the sense of window flung wide open to the universe? It is the adventures of mind, the joy of which does not pass away, that give the adventure of life itself, beauty and fragrance.

21. What do the books tell you about stranger?

- (2) That he believes in priceless investment
- (3) That he has good mental faculty
- (4) That he motivates to others to read books

- (2) one feels the influence of a great writer

- (1) a prominent writer
- (2) the spiritual effect of a master
- (3) one who has a control over the spirit of a man
- (4) one has had too many rugs

Directions : Read the following passage and each group of four statements given below contains one statement which is most acceptable in the light of the passage and answer the questions 24 to 27.

There are a great many people who have all the material conditions of happiness, i.e., health and a sufficient income, and who, nevertheless, are profoundly unhappy. In such cases it would seem as if the fault must lie with a wrong theory as to how to live. We imagine ourselves more different from the animals than we are. Animals live on impulse, and are happy as long as external conditions are favorable. If you have a cat it will enjoy life if it has food and warmth and opportunities for an occasional night on the tiles. Your needs are more complex than those of your cat, but they still have their basis in instinct. In civilized societies this is too apt to be forgotten. People propose to themselves someone paramount objective, and restrain all impulses that do not minister to it. A businessman may be anxious to grow rich that to the end he sacrifices health and private affections. When at least he has become rich, no pleasure remains for him except harrying other people by exhortations to imitate his noble example.

If you look around you at the men and women whom you can call happy, you will see that they all have certain things in common. The most important of these things is an activity which at most times is enjoyable on its own account and which, in addition, gradually builds up something that you are glad to see coming into existence. Many men who spend their working life in the city devote their work-ends to voluntary and unremunerated toil in their gardens, and when the spring comes they experience all the joys of having created beauty. It is the simple things that really matter. If a man delights in his wife and children, has success in work, and finds pleasure the alternation of day and night, spring and autumn, he will be happy whatever his philosophy may be. Man is an animal, and his happiness depends on his physiology more than he likes to think. This is humble conclusion, but I cannot make myself disbelieve it. Unhappy businessmen would increase their happiness more by walking six miles every day than by any conceivable change of philosophy.

24. According to the passage,

26. According to the passage,
