2. Translate the following passage into Bengali : 15

The coral that is commonly used is the skeleton of animals called coral polyps. It is astonishing to think of their nature and habits. At first sight they seem to be useless and insignificant insects, but one is struck mute with admiration to see the vast islands they build up. Coral is a kind of animal growth and not at all a vegetable substance. The coral insects live in the sea and thousands and thousands of them work together and pile up huge islands. A white milk-like juice is secreted from their body. It has the wonderful property of being hardened as soon as it comes out. This hardened juice forms a covering for the coral insect's body like the hard shell of the snail. This covering may as well be termed its dwelling place. No one has ever been able to ascertain how this wonderful juice is produced from the body of the insects, nor has anyone been able to produce it by the mixture of any substances. This juice, when hardened, becomes so tough and firm that even the strong currents and terrible waves of the sea cannot shake or move it, and being gradually piled up, it turns into a big island.
