Read the following passage carefully and answer the given questions.

The constitution of a country, including India, is usually, framed by the people through their elected representatives. The Indian Constitution, framed by the Constituent Assembly as established through the Cabinet Mission Plan of 1946, practically, represented all sections of the Indian people, though it was not formally an elected one. The Indian National Congress demanded a constituent assembly in the Faizpur session of the Congress in 1937, reiterating later in 1939 and in its Ramgarh session in 1940. The British government accepted the demand for a constituent assembly in August, 1940 offer by Viceroy Linlithgow. The Cripps Plan of 1942 promised such an assembly only after the World War II while the Cabinet Mission plan of 1946 recommended a constituent assembly to frame the Constitution. This plan sent by the British Government to India, recommended a constitution-making body for India to frame the constitution.
