Water ice in polar craters of the moon 	Why in news? <ul style="list-style-type: none"> The study was conducted by scientists from ISRO's Space Applications Centre (SAC) in collaboration with researchers from IIT Kanpur, University of Southern California, Jet Propulsion Laboratory, and IIT (ISM) Dhanbad. The research found evidence of an enhanced possibility of water ice occurrence in the polar craters of the moon. Key points: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> The study suggests that drilling on the moon to sample or excavate that ice will be crucial for future missions and long-term human presence. The extent of water ice in the northern polar region is twice that in the southern polar region. The primary source of sub-surface water ice in the lunar poles is believed to be out-gassing during volcanism in the Imbrian period. The distribution of water ice is likely governed by mare volcanism and preferential impact cratering.
